FIRST BRIGADE COMES SUNDAY

Three Regiments of Troops will Go into Camp at Gettysburg Next Sunday. Details of Maneuvers Announced.

The First Brigade N. G. P. will arrive here next Sunday afternoon and evening going into camp immediately where the advance details will have pitched their tents. The Third Brigade will arrive Monday and the Fourth Brigade Tuesday. Camp Edwin S. Stuart will open on Monday morning, July 22, at 7.30. Brigadier General Price of the First Brigade will establish his headquarters the Saturday previous.

With the opening of camp only a few days distant the site west of town is busier than ever. Division headquarters are rapidly being gotten in shape and many of the tents are up. Details for erecting the other camps will get in Friday and Saturday. Practically all the infantry will be brought over the Reading and the First Brigade, which arrives Sunday afternoon and evening, will detrain near the Mummansburg Road.

A provost guard will be established in the town the latter part of the week, consisting of Company D, 1st Infantry and a small detail of cavalry. Further plans about the work of the camp have been announced.

The afternoon of July 25 has been set aside for a demonstration by the engineers. Trenches will be dug, the various methods of sheltering troops from dangerous missiles will be demonstrated and the effect of explosives will be shown by exploding quantities of dynamite and nitro-glycerine.

On one day the troops will leave their permanent camp, march out beyond the lines taken up by the Union troops at the battle of Gettysburg on the first day, and establish a temporary camp, erecting their small shelter tents and cooking their dinner over small campfires, using their mess pans and individual cooking equipment. A strong position will be taken up, and in the afternoon an attack will be made on the camp by troops from one of the other brigades. The return to camp will take place later in the afternoon.

COUPLE ON 900 MILE WALK

Prof. A. M. Toler, teacher of mathematics in a school at Reading, and his pretty young wife, dressed in khaki costumes, are on a 900 mile hike from Reading to Pikesville, Ky., where Professor Toler's parents reside. Each carries 10 pounds of baggage and Professor Toler showed in addition a 44 calibre revolver in a belt about his waist. He was recently appointed principal of the Dunmore School at Staunton, Va.

Professor Toler's grandmother was a sister of "Devil Anse" Hatfield, formerly famous as the head of the Kentucky feud family. He is a cousin of Dr. Drury Hatfield, Republican candidate for Governor of West Virginia.

Professor and Mrs. Toler left Reading on July 4 and expect to reach their destination by July 30. They tramped through the Lebanon Valley and spent two days on the Gettysburg battlefield.

The couple will visit Harpers Ferry, Luray Caverns and Natural Bridge. They expect to average 30 miles a day. Professor Toler carries a speedometer. He says he and his wife are fond of outdoor life and decided to spend their vacation in a long tramp instead of going to the seashore.

APPOINTED MEAT INSPECTOR

The Greensburg Daily Tribune says: Gov. John K. Tener has appointed Dr. Samuel E. Bruner of Greensburg formerly of Gettysburg, to be State Meat Inspector for Western Pennsylvania with headquarters in Greensburg. The office of state meat inspector is a responsible one and carries with it a lucrative salary.

Dr. Bruner is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, and was one of the honor men of his class at graduation. Congratulations are being showered upon the "little doctor," as he is familiarly known to his Greensburg friends.

FRUIT GROWERS' 100TH MEETING

Adams County Fruit Growers' Association Holds its Hundredth Meeting in Hall at Bendersville. Many Benefits are Named.

The one hundredth regular meeting of the Fruit Growers' Association of Adams County was held in Fruit Growers' Hall, Bendersville, Saturday evening. Routine business was transacted and several new members were voted upon and elected.

A telegram was read from Hon. D. F. Lafane announcing the passage in the House of Representatives of the so called Sulzer Apple Package and Grade Bill, providing for uniform size of apple barrels and U. S. standard grades for apples in barrels and boxes. The bill has been introduced in the Senate and a hearing has been held before the committee on commerce of which Senator George T. Oliver of Pennsylvania is a member. The passage of this bill would put our apples on an equal footing with Canadian fruit which now have an advantage in foreign markets by reason of the Canadian Fruit Marks Act. Every grower should show his interest by writing at once to Senators Penrose and Oliver urging the passage of this bill, Number 21480.

Prof. K. L. Watts who was scheduled for a part on the program started from State College, but was taken sick at Tyrone and upon advice of physician returned to his home.

President Eldon outlined briefly the past of the association since its beginning in 1903, its growth from about fifty the first year to five times that number now, now embracing in its membership not only all fruit growers worthy of the name, but others who have joined through the desire to help the development of the community. Harry M. Keller spoke of the advantage the association had been to the county in many ways not only in securing better prices for fruit, but actually increasing the value of real estate throughout the fruit belt.

Wm. H. Black gave as his belief that no small part of the value of the association lay in the really great men that it has brought to the community from time to time, and the great privilege it has been to meet and know these men. He strongly urged the further development of the social side of the organization.

Robert Garretson spoke of the great improvement in the quality of Adams County fruit in the past ten years and the better machinery and newer methods used in producing it. He attributes this largely to the teaching of the association.

C. A. Griest spoke of the future of the association. He suggested that after the matter of fruit production had been developed to its highest state, the next direction for its activities to take should be improvement in marketing methods. This might take the form of some of the co-operative selling plans now in use elsewhere, or it might be of some entirely new plan adapted especially to the needs of this community.

Prof. Elmer Kuntz, Superintendent of Schools at Lansford, Pa., spoke encouragingly of the fruit industry and the fine development which the Fruit Growers' Association has wrought here. He said that considering the stage of advancement of our business here evident, that this might easily be the one hundredth anniversary instead of merely the one hundredth meeting.

Everyone present was invited as the guest of the Association to partake of the refreshments served at the end of the program.

Adjourned to meet second Saturday in August at 7.30 p. m.

CATHOLIC VS ST. JAMES

The Sunday School game scheduled for tonight is Catholic vs. St. James. A good game is expected.

So keen has the rivalry between the teams become and so ardent are some of the fans in their "rooting" that the management of the League deems it wise to caution all in the matter of their cheering. Objectionable "rooting" will not be tolerated and those who indulge in personal remarks will be asked to leave the field. It should not be necessary to make such a request in a sport where friendly rivalry should rule but some thoughtless persons require it.

HAVING purchased the entire output of a large post card manufacturer I am now prepared to furnish boys with post cards cheaper than any other store in town. Ziegler's store.

THIRTEEN DEAD IN R. R. WRECK

Fast Train Collides With Another and Telescopes Cars.

THE VICTIMS ARE ROBBED

Diamonds and Jewelry Missing From Bodies, Ten Cents Being Largest Sum Found on Any Corpse.

Chicago, July 15.—Thirteen persons were killed and fifteen to twenty were injured in a wreck on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad at Western Springs, a suburb of Chicago.

Coming through a fog with supposedly a clear track ahead, train No. 8, a fast mail, ran at full speed into the rear of train No. 2, known as the Overland Express, from Denver, which was standing still on the track, telescoping two of the Overland's Pullman cars.

Railroad officials refused to fix the blame until after the wreck had been investigated thoroughly. Mrs. F. A. Wilcox, who was in charge of the tower from which the block signals were controlled, said she was certain the block was thrown against both trains. She collapsed after the accident and still is in a highly nervous condition.

The locomotive of No. 8 plowed through the rear car and crushed out the lives of helpless passengers, many of whom still were in their berths. On into the second coach the locomotive then sped. Half way through that car it veered to the left, derailing the sleeper. The locomotive was entirely stripped when it stopped.

Fire soon started from the gas lights in the sleepers. Many victims, pinioned down by heavy timbers and iron, pleaded for death. Members of the fire departments of Western Springs and La Grange were on the scene within a few minutes after the wreck occurred and they put out the fire with lines of hose.

Ghouls are believed to have robbed the dead before they reached the morgue in La Grange. More than a dozen large diamond sets are missing from jewelry, and although most of the dead appeared to have been persons in comfortable circumstances, a dime was the largest sum of money found on any of the bodies.

In a little room above a business house in La Grange Mrs. Wilcox hid herself from visitors. The shades were drawn and she was trying to collect her thoughts. Finally she said:

"Three trains instead of two passed the signals in violation of all rules, although it may have been that the engineers did not see the trains."

"First I heard No. 4, a train in no way connected with the wreck, pass. Then, in a few minutes, No. 2 came by. I thought something was wrong, and I began to try to think of something to do to stop the trains from running by the board. But before I could get my wish together No. 8 had sped by. The crash followed."

Another story of how the collision occurred differed from that of Mrs. Wilcox. It was that No. 2, having been blocked by a signal, had sent a brakeman to set torpedoes to warn No. 8.

No. 8 was coming down grade when the crash came. Persons responsible for the story of the torpedoes said that No. 8 had been given a signal that the track was clear and that the crew either had failed to hear the torpedo or had believed they had a clear track.

A statement issued by P. S. Ernst, passenger traffic manager of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad, substantiated Mrs. Wilcox's assertion that she was not to blame and also corroborated the story that torpedoes were set by the brakeman of No. 2. The statement does not fix the blame for the collision.

FROM PORTER TO WEALTH

Hustling Negro Becomes Biggest Property Owner in His City.

Brooklyn, Mass., July 15.—From a Pullman porter to the biggest property owner in the city in five years is the jump which Watt Terry, a negro, has made.

When papers passed conveying to Terry the famous Chockerton and Chesnut apartments, valued at $150,000, the negro became the owner of $500,000 worth of the choicest property in Brooklyn.

Terry has had a meteoric career, and where he once made $7 a week he now is making hundreds. The apartments conveyed were owned by Thomas B. Innes, formerly of New York, and are the only ones of this kind in the world.

Coming to Brooklyn from Virginia when a young man, Terry took a position as coachman for a well known physician. Then he went to the Y. M. C. A. as an assistant janitor and immediately became interested in the evening school. He enrolled and studied diligently. Finally he went away and was a Pullman porter for a while; then he returned to Brooklyn and went to work in a shoe factory at $7 a week. By keeping his nose to the grindstone he worked his pay up to $25 a week and then turned his attention to investing his savings.

Bride Inherits $200,000.

Birdsboro, Pa., July 15.—Former Miss Mattie Maxson, of Monaca, who married Kennedy Crossman, of Fox Chase, and who is well known in Berks county, has inherited $200,000.

LORIMER HAS NO PLANS.

Loses His Seat in the Senate by Vote of 55 to 28.

Washington, July 15.—Pale, haggard and exhausted after a dramatic three-day defense of himself, William Lorimer, of Illinois, slowly rose from his seat in the senate and withdrew to a cloak room as the vice president announced that the senate, by the overwhelming vote of 55 to 28, had declared his election was procured by corruption, and that his seat should be vacated.

Senator Lorimer said: "I must think things over and talk with my friends before I can say whether I shall go into a political fight for vindication. The place for me to make a fight, should I determine on such a course, would be before the people. The candidates for the legislature which will select my successor have already been nominated. Consequently I cannot go into the coming fight. Thus, I should have to wait until two years hence. I have not looked that far ahead. Before reaching any decision on that point I want to have a full opportunity to talk with my friends back home."

ORDERS LOWER EXPRESS RATES

Interstate Commission Makes New Rulings.

Washington, July 15.—The Interstate commerce commission has ordered sweeping reductions in the rates charged by express companies.

It has also ordered far-reaching reforms in the regulations and practices of the companies and has also imposed upon them a uniform system of rate making.

The order of the commission, while not final, is subject only to a hearing to be given the express companies on Oct. 9. The commission calls upon the companies to show cause at that time why the changes in rates and practices should not immediately go into effect.

The decision of the commission will cause a general reduction in rates on small packages of about 20 per cent. While the average reduction is only 20 per cent, the reductions taken altogether range from 10 to 50 per cent.

An important requirement of the commission is that the companies shall adopt a distinctive tag or label which will clearly show whether a package has been prepaid or not. In the event of doubt the receiver of a package will not be compelled to pay and the express companies will no longer have the benefit of thousands of dollars that have flowed into their treasuries through double charges.

In short the decision of the commission revolutionizes the express business in this country.

EXPLOSION KILLS FOUR

Boiler of Engine Running Threshing Machine Blows Up.

Prospect, Va., July 15.—While threshing wheat at Cary Booker's farm the boiler of an engine owned by A. W. Wood and being run by Robert Johnson, exploded, killing instantly four men and seriously injuring several others, one of whom may die.

Those killed were Robert Johnson, John Booker, William and James Henderson.

It is supposed that water got too low in the boiler, causing the explosion. One of the men killed was at some distance from the machine at work in the field, being struck by flying fragments.

CAUGHT IN GRAFT TRAP

Detective Says He Bribe County Commissioner.

GAVE $100 HAND MONEY

Architect-Sleuth Offered $8000 to Have His Plans For Insane Asylum Accepted.

Johnstown, Pa., July 15.—Rumors of grafting proposals in connection with the selection of the plans and an architect for the proposed county insane asylum came to a sensational climax in Ebensburg when County Commissioner Anderson made public a statement, in which he alleged that R. W. Clay, who has been posing as an architect, and whose plans were before the board of commissioners for consideration, was a representative of the Burns detective agency and had secured the offering of a motion that his plans be adopted by promises of a money consideration to himself and Commissioner T. Stanton Davis.

Mr. Anderson declares he was aware that Clay was a detective, and on the advice of his counsel, James W. Leech, and with a clear understanding between himself and Clay, participated in a meeting, at which he was given $100 in cash.

Mr. Anderson handed over the money to a third party, giving a statement of the manner in which he received it.

At a meeting of the board of commissioners, subsequent to the meeting between Commissioners Anderson and Davis and "Architect" Clay, Mr. Davis made a motion that the Clay plans be adopted. The motion was not seconded and was laid on the table.

The statement of Commissioner Anderson implies that Commissioner T. Stanton Davis had agreed to favor the Clay plans for a cash consideration. Mr. Anderson asserts that he was aware of Clay's identity and that he went along with the "architect" and Commissioner Davis in the latter's automobile to consummate a bargain, with no other motive than to expose the attempted graft.

The money payment was made, according to Mr. Anderson, at a point on a country road within a mile of Ebensburg. The $100 was handed over merely as "hand money," and according to the arrangements made, a much larger amount was to be divided between himself and Commissioner Davis.

Commissioner Anderson's statement alleges that Commissioner Davis approached him on several occasions with the suggestion that they could procure money for favoring the Clay plans, and states that the sum mentioned was one-half of the architect's fee.

Mr. Anderson says the sum mentioned was $8000, to be divided between the two commissioners, and that when his colleague said the cost of the asylum must be reduced, "Architect" Clay said this could easily be done by cutting off various portions of the proposed building; but, as his commission would be reduced, the payments to the commissioners must also be reduced. Mr. Anderson stated that all these matters were discussed during the automobile ride and the bargain finally consummated.

Commissioner Davis admitted to a reporter that he took "Architect" Clay and Commissioner Anderson in his automobile and that he witnessed the payment of the money by Clay to Anderson.

Davis denies, however, that he ever agreed to accept any recompense for favoring the Clay plans. He admits that Clay made him repeated offers and that he was aware that $100 hand money was to be paid Commissioner Anderson. Mr. Davis further alleges that he told Walter Jones and A. D. Meyers, Ebensburg attorneys, that Clay had solicited his acceptance of a bribe some days prior to the date of the auto trip.

"Architect" Clay has been in Ebensburg for some time, and it is learned that several residents of the county seat had something to do with his operations. It is admitted that he is not a professional architect, but just what object was in view in securing his services does not yet appear; neither has it been made known who is meeting the charges for his services. Skillful Burns operatives usually command a pretty respectable salary, while the incidental expenses are of considerable volume.

William the Conqueror, the Rufian Who Stole—and Made—England

ON a hillside (near Hastings, Eng., on October 14, 1066) was massed a travel stained army, led by a yellow-haired giant. The army was made up of Saxons—from ill-famed peasants to the full-armed "hus-carls" of the royal bodyguard. The leader was Harold, Saxon king of England. He had rushed his troops by long marches to this spot, to check the advance of a Norman invader.

In the plain below, toward the hillside, marched the invading host. Far in advance of their line rode a Norman minstrel, Taillefer, gaudily dressed, throwing his sword into the air and catching it; singing loudly the "Death Chant of Roland." It was this minstrel who struck the first blow in the battle of Hastings and who was first to fall.

The Normans flung themselves upon the Saxons, only to be sent reeling back. Again and again they charged vainly against that solid battle line. The Saxons hurled them off, shouting: "Out! Out!" At last the wily Norman leader, Duke William, tried craft where force had failed. He drew off his soldiers in seeming retreat. The headstrong Saxons, disobeying Harold's orders, broke their own line to dash in disorderly pursuit of the fleeing foe. The Normans suddenly turned and charged through the broken line, gaining the hilltop, scattering the Saxons, slaying Harold and winning England!

It was a big day with Destiny. It was also a day wherein might conquer right; and where, out of crushing defeat, England made her first step toward greatness.

Now, Sweden and Denmark were peopled by wild, bloodthirsty seafarers. Unable to prosper in their own bleak lands, these "Northmen" (or "Normans") had for centuries made raids on the rich coasts of England and France. So dreaded were these raids that the old English prayer book contained the petition: "From the fury of the Northmen, good Lord, deliver us!" A band of Norse pirates had swooped down on France and had settled in a rich district of that country. They called themselves "Normans" and their province "Normandy."

William the Conqueror was the son of Duke Robert of Normandy ("Robert the Devil") and a tanner's daughter. He was born in 1027. From early boyhood he led a life of constant warfare, peril and treachery. In order to save his dukedom and his life from the greed of neighboring potentates he was forced to acts of brutality and crime. At length he was safely established in his own realm and looked about him for further conquests. His eye fell on England.

The English king, Edward "the Confessor," was childless. William persuaded or bribed Edward to bequeath to him the throne of England.

Edward died early in 1066. The English decided, rightfully, that no king could legally bequeath his crown to anyone. So they elected Harold their king. At once William demanded the crown. Harold refused to give it up. William stirred up an invasion of England by the Norwegians and landed a Norman host on the British shores at about the same time. Harold thrashed the Norwegians, then hurried his tired army to Hastings to meet William. The Normans were victorious; and in London, on Christmas day, 1066, William was crowned king of England. There he built a fortress that later became the famous "Tower of London."

His conquest of England was a piece of bare highway robbery, with no shadow of moral right to justify it. Yet, in the end, it was the best thing that could have happened to the country. For it infused new blood into the rough Saxon strain, modernized the isolated, old-fashioned British and brought them into touch with the world at large and with progress.

To create a royal hunting park for himself (the New Forest) he destroyed villages, churches, convents and farms for a space of thirty miles in Hampshire and had a desolate track stocked with game for his own pleasure. The evicted inhabitants were turned away to starve. William's fathers had been sea rovers. He had chosen to become a land pirate; merciless, grasping; a lawless lawbreaker.

The king of France made fun of William's fatness. William, in rage, found excuse to invade France. There, in 1087, he captured and burned the town of Nantes. As he was riding through the city's hot embers, his horse reared and threw him, causing mortal injury.

Thus the blackguard who for sixty years had braved death in every form perished at last through a bit of careless horsemanship.

Many a man has been wrecked on a train of thought.

Slender Figure of Speech.
A Tacoma lawyer, arguing a divorce case recently, closed his address to the jury as follows: "My client is a beautiful woman, so beautiful that the sun seems to stand still while the stars gaze at her. Truthful! Fidelity flows from her even as the jack rabbit sits from the greyhound. Sweet! Gentleness, honey would freeze in her mouth. Tender and slender! My client could bathe in a fountain pen."—National Corporation Reporter.

The Letter-Day Girl.
"Girls nowadays are very queer creatures," says Bishop Creighton, in a passage not inapplicable at the present time. They like to do odd and independent things, and they will think for themselves, without considering if they have brains enough to think things out. It is all very well to think, if you go far enough; but most people stop in the middle, and so make a mess.

"Don't do that; don't regard yourself as an interesting object. Remember, the best thing to be is not a curious, original, flighty being, but a good, honest, simple, straightforward girl, which is what nature intended you to be. Therefore, do not muddle up your mind too much."

An Alternative.
A suggestion has been made to the militant suffragettes that, as an alternative to window smashing, women should express their indignation at being denied the vote by refusing to be given in marriage. "Let the ladies of the land," says the masculine maker of the suggestion, "politely, but firmly decline offers of marriage until the votes of women are as secure on the statute books as the votes of men, and I warrant that the country will come to heel as quickly as it has come to heel at the bidding of the miners."

TWO MINERS DEAD WHEN RECOVERED

They Were Killed by a Rush of Coal

Shamokin, Pa., July 15. — After a long, perilous fight to learn whether Adam Way and Harry Derrick were living or dead in the Burnside colliery, operated by the Philadelphia & Reading Coal and Iron company, a rescuing party discovered the two men dead.

They were found up a steep breast, 450 feet from the bottom of the gang way. The bodies were close together and wedged between lumps of coal surrounded by dirt.

Officials think the men were instantly killed, while some of the miners are of the opinion that Way and Derrick, after being made prisoners in the rush of coal, waited for some time before death overtook them by the air becoming foul enough to suffocate them.

The bodies were found face down ward, indicating that the men were carried some distance by the coal after it started moving. The breast had a pitch of eighty degrees, and when the rescuing party entered they had to move with great caution in order not to dislodge any of the lumps of coal, in which event another rush would have occurred, which would have likely resulted in crushing and maiming the fifty men of the rescuing party in the breast at the time.

The removal of the dead to the bottom of the gangway was attended with much peril. When the bodies were taken to the surface and brought to town the road was lined with men, women and children, who had assembled when news was flashed that the bodies had been recovered.

GANGRENE KILLS YOUTH

Fourth of July Wound Proves Fatal to Columbia Lad.

Columbia, Pa., July 15. — A small wound inflicted on his left thumb by the premature explosion of a fire cracker on the Fourth of July, resulted in the death of Edward Billet, aged seventeen years.

The wound was so insignificant that no attention was paid to it, and Billet continued at his work. On Thursday he was taken suddenly ill, and died in less than twelve hours.

Instead of tetanus developing, the poison passed through the young man's system, causing gangrene.

Unexpected Fortune Fatal.

SOUTH AFRICAN WINS MARATHON

K. K. McArthur Captures the Olympic Classic.

THIRD PLACE FOR AMERICA

Ten Sturdy Americans Battle With Pick of World's Runners, and All Finish in First Fifteen.

Stockholm, Sweden, July 15. — The land of the southern cross came out victorious in the supreme test for long distance runners for K. K. McArthur and C. W. Githaw, the only South Africans entered in the classic Marathon, who finished first and second.

Through the glory of the occasion reared with the British colony, there was honor for America in the result of the race for little Gaston Strobino, the South Paterson boy, who was sent to Stockholm by the subscription of his fellow citizens, finished in third place less than a minute behind Githaw. Sokkaleris, the Indian from Oldtown, Me., was fourth, and other sturdy runners from the United States supplied eight men in the first fifteen to finish the grueling contest in front of the royal box in the stadium.

The distance of the race was about twenty-five miles, considerably shorter than the other Olympic Marathons, where an effort was made to retain the distance over which the Greek soldier traveled to deliver the news at Athens of the battle of Marathon. Thus it was that the winner easily broke the Olympic record, finishing in two hours, 36 minutes, 50 seconds, against the two hours, 51 minutes, 23 1/2 seconds, made by Sherring, of Canada, who won at Athens in 1906. Githaw's time was two hours, 37 minutes, 52 seconds, while Strobino completed the distance in two hours, 38 minutes, 42 seconds.

Outrun at the start, the Paterson youth gave a fine exhibition of pluck and endurance toward the finish, when the more fancied Americans had given way under the terrific strain. Running in the rack for the first half of the journey, Strobino first became noticed as a possible contender when he had flashed into ninth place nine miles from home. He was then behind two other Americans, Richard F. Pigott, of the North Dorchester A. A., and Louis Tewanima, the Carlisle Indian.

Strobino's running from that point was remarkable, and passing man after man he had only the two South Africans in front of him a little over three miles from the stadium. These two were fighting out between them for the honor of taking the prize to their country, and though he finished fresher than either of the men that led him home, the Paterson boy had not sufficient time to wear them down.

McArthur was out to the last ounce when he reached the royal box after running once around the stadium and collapsed as soon as he crossed the line. Githaw, the second man, finished stronger, but it remained for Strobino to set the crowd yelling with enthusiasm as he sprinted down the stretch apparently none the wiser for his strenuous exertions.

There were more than sixty competitors, representing eighteen nations, and hundreds of thousands of spectators were stretched around the course, while the stadium was crowded with an anxious throng. A broiling sun beating down on the men who were striving for the crowning glory of this greatest of Olympic meets made the journey over the rough and hilly roads even more severe than had been anticipated.

King Gustaf of Sweden occupied the royal box with a party of visitors and was much concerned when McArthur came staggering around the track at the finish, walking at times and at others breaking into a feeble run. A few moments on the ground revived the winner, so that he smiled bravely when his frantic supporters raised him to their shoulders and carried him in triumph around the stadium.

McCOMBS TO LEAD FIGHT FOR WILSON

To be Assisted by a Committee of Fifteen

See Girl, N. J., July 15.—Woodrow Wilson's suggestions for the Democratic national committee, if adopted in Chicago, will effect a reform in the personnel of the leaders of that body and in its method of doing business which will practically put the old committee out of business.

A board of directors, styled a committee, with William F. McCombs as its chairman, is to run the campaign just as a board of directors runs a corporation. Twelve or fifteen men at first, perhaps more later, will constitute the directorship, and half of them will be present members of the national committee.

The officers of the corporation will be: President and chairman of the board, William F. McCombs, of New York; vice chairman, William G. McAdoo, of New Jersey; secretary, Joseph E. ## MORE ROOM.

A man seeing an advertisement in the paper, "A five-room house to let," went to have a look at it. It was just the size he wanted, but was sadly out of repair. He went to the agent's office and said he didn't want a six-roomed house.

"That isn't a six-roomed house," said the agent.
"Oh, yes, it is."
"But I say it is not." And the agent began counting. "There's the kitchen, the dining-room, reception-room and two bedrooms—that's five, isn't it?"
"Yes; but there's the room for improvement," said the prospective tenant, "and that's bigger than any of the others."—Tit Bits.

"What?"
"Some men will be sure to get in bad if they pay their wives higher salaries than their stenographers draw."

Malvina Moves

Malvina sighed and arose from her typewriter. "I might have known that inspiration for love stories would flee from mountain boarding houses," she told herself as she swept a hand across her wide, intelligent eyes.

From the room below which was called parlor came the refrain of "Oh, You Beautiful Dadd," then, "Every Little Movement." The tone from the piano itself was like the jangle of many discordant tins, but the music—

Malvina stopped her ears, then, with quick movements slipped into her white jersey and out into the cool mountain air. Her nerves were in dire need of calm and quiet.

She walked on with lightened heart. The pungent odor of balsam and the cool breezes from the lake soothed her.

She approached a small camp with eager steps. How had this jewel in the forest escaped her before?

The young author did not stop to realize that this was her first venture into the depths of the woods. And with the writer's longing for seclusion Malvina pictured herself ensconced in that picturesque camp. She felt that all of her budding plot would burst into full bloom and that her name would appear in many of the magazines. Even under the trying position of living in boarding houses Malvina's work had found favor with two or three editors. James Blake of the Comet had been especially attracted to her stories. She hoped, before long, to meet him. He had been a great help to her.

The girl's imaginings had brought her to the door of the camp. Her eyes opened wide in surprise. The place was open at doors and windows and was apparently without an inhabitant. Malvina's heart quickened its beat. Perhaps she could run away from the boarding house with her little typewriter and work here in this wonder house?

Inside all was rough, but not without a sense of the artistic. Malvina came to the quick conclusion that a man who was fond of hunting owned the camp and that he had there only during the hunting season.

With joyous feet she hurried back to the boarding house and from there to the village store. It was imperative to Malvina that when writing she have pink flowered curtains and a pink kimono. The latter she already had. The pink curtains which she would tack up in the camp must be purchased at the one village store.

It was the following day before she arrived at the little house. She was laden with her typewriter, her pink curtains, her tea equipment and her pink kimono.

Malvina was tired but happy when she threw herself down on the wide couch for a moment's rest. The camp had been turned into a bower of pink and odd dishes of wild flowers were scattered about.

Outside, at the edge of the forest, a big man swung along with an old handbag in one hand and his fishing paraphernalia in the other.

When he drew near an indefinable something stirred within him. Never before, during the many summers he had spent in the mountains, had his camp seemed so desolate.

Blake quickened his pace and sprang up to the veranda. He stopped before he had entered, held by the glimmer of pink at the windows.

Instinctively Blake removed his soft hat before going inside. He caught a quick breath and stood as if suddenly lost to his surroundings.

By all the laws of propriety Blake should have turned and left his own camp. But he could not move with the sight of Malvina pictured before him. She was in a sound sleep and her cheeks were flushed. Her glorious hair was a mass of spun copper that trailed over the cushion.

The power of his eyes disturbed her and she stirred. Blake, spell-bound, watched the heavy lashes flutter, then rise slowly up to reveal her eyes.

Blake then came to his senses and turned toward the door. He waited outside on the veranda until she should come. He felt that she would follow immediately.

Malvina did. "I suppose you are the hunter who invited wayfarers to your camp?" she asked with a half smile.

"And you are the wayfarer?" Blake returned because he could think of nothing else for the moment.

"I supposed the hunting season did not begin until later," Malvina smiled half wistfully.

"It does not. But fishing suits me almost as well, and since the Comet needs me in the fall—"

"And you need your own camp now?" Malvina interrupted. "It is time for me to depart."

"Not at all—I intend to stay at a boarding place nearby—where I shall not have to bother even with my own meager fare."

But Malvina would not remain; she felt that she must go, and since Blake had insisted that he preferred to stay at the boarding place he must needs go whether or not he liked.

Thus, the two found themselves at the table of the mountain boarding house and it was in that once despoiled parlor that—not a month later—Malvina promised to marry James Blake, editor.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—The story opens in a camp of the Confederate army at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Captain Wayne a secret message to Longstreet, upon the delivery of which depend great issues. Accompanied by Sergeant Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts out on his dangerous mission.

CHAPTER II.—The two messengers make a wild ride, dodging squads of soldiers, almost lose their bearings and finally are within the lines of the enemy, having penetrated the cordon of pickets unobserved.

CHAPTER III.—Encountering a small party of soldiers in the darkness, Wayne is taken for a federal officer who came to keep an appointment. He is accepted as his representative, and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge.

CHAPTER IV.—The female companion of the two southern scouts is a northern girl, who, when she becomes aware of their army affiliations, eludes Wayne with her riding whip and attempts to escape but fails.

CHAPTER V.—One of the horses giving out, Wayne orders Craig to get through with the dispatches to Longstreet. He and My Lady of the North are left alone near a rocky gorge.

CHAPTER VI.—The Confederate officer and the Union girl thread the mazes of the woods. He discovers a lonely hut, and entering it in the dark a huge man attacks him. The girl shoots the brute just in time.

CHAPTER VII.—The owner of the hut, one Jed Bunkay, appears and he and his wife give the couple a welcome. Suddenly a party of horsemen are observed coming down the road.

CHAPTER VIII.—They are led by a man claiming to be Red Lowrie, who orders Mrs. Bunkay to give them food, and her husband to act as a guide. The woman discovers the man to be a disguised intruder, attacks the intruder and there is a general melee.

CHAPTER IX.—The disguised leader proves to be Major Brennan, a federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy. The girl protests and says she will appeal to General Sheridan.

CHAPTER X.—Wayne held prisoner in a cabin, sees files of Confederates pass the road at a distance and knows that Craig has delivered the message.

CHAPTER XI.—The captive is brought before General Sheridan who refuses to set him free unless he reveals the secret message.

CHAPTER XII.—Captain Wayne is led to understand that the woman he admires is Edith Brennan, wife of the Federal officer who has been shot. He is given the choice of revealing the Lee message or of being shot as a spy.

CHAPTER XIII.—Wayne is rescued from his prison by Jed Bunkay. One of them must get a quick report through the lines to General Lee and Jed starts on the mission.

CHAPTER XIV.—Finding the garb of an absent officer of the Union artillery, Wayne penetrates to the ballroom, where a social army function is in progress, and pretends to be Col. Curran of Ohio.

CHAPTER XV.—The disguised scout is introduced to a Miss Minor. She knows the Curran family and Wayne barely escapes being unmasked. Edith Brennan appears on the scene.

CHAPTER XVI.—Mrs. Brennan recognizes Wayne. She has been led to believe that he had been sent away, learns of the treachery of Maj. Brennan and she will save him.

CHAPTER XVII.—Mrs. Brennan secures a pass through the inner lines and goes part way with Wayne when they are suddenly confronted by Brennan.

CHAPTER XVIII.—Brennan attempts to shoot Wayne, but the latter throws his enemy to the ground senseless.

CHAPTER XIX.—Bidding My Lady of the North adieu, Wayne starts alone on a wild dash for freedom. Encountering a man in a lieutenant's uniform, he compels him to accompany him.

CHAPTER XX.—His companion turns out to be Jed Bunkay in disguise. They clear the Union lines and face towards the Confederate camp.

CHAPTER XXI.—Captain Wayne and the faithful Jed reach the Lee camp in safety and are sent away to accompany reinforcements to General Early.

CHAPTER XXII.—Wayne and his regiment are sent to save the Confederate army in the battle of Sheridan's. Here a solid wall of blue overwhelms them and the regiment is lost.

CHAPTER XXIII.—Wayne is wounded and taken to the field hospital, where he is visited by Edith Brennan, who is kind and gracious.

CHAPTER XXIV.—The wounded Confederate have a hard night ride as they are returned to camp, Wayne among them.

CHAPTER XXV.—Wayne learns that Major Brennan has scattered the falsehood that he is a coward and refused to meet him to wipe out an insult to Edith Brennan.

CHAPTER XXVI.—Wayne and Jed Bunkay are sent on a scouting detail from Richmond. The latter learns that the fortunes of war have disrupted his home and that his wife is a fugitive.

CHAPTER XXVII.—The Confederate detail arrives at the Minor place where Wayne meets Miss Celia Minor and Mrs. Bunkay. Edith Brennan appears.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

We Capture a Courier.

The girl's light burst of laughter aroused me thoroughly to a sense of our situation.

"You seem to derive much amusement from a condition of affairs almost intolerable to me," I said bitterly. "I have always valued most highly the friendship of Mrs. Brennan, but this unfortunate occurrence will doubtless end it."

She glanced up at me, her long lashes wet, but her dark eyes sparkling with mischief.

"Oh, she won't care so far as you are concerned," she exclaimed indifferently. "But I suppose she will think I am perfectly horrid. Well, I don't care if she does. I might have waited and learned the truth first. Wasn't her face a study?"

How shall I ever explain to Arthur so that he will understand? I'm sure I have got the worst of it. Oh, Captain Wayne, is my hair all ruffled up? I know I look like a fright. You must come in now, and we will explain to Mrs. Brennan the whole matter. She cannot help believing us both, while I know she would be so cold and proud to me alone."

I shook my head decisively. Perhaps it was better ended so; at least I possessed no courage just then to face her indignation. She might but deem we had concocted our explanation, and would very likely receive it with all the scorn she felt it deserved.

Besides, it was clear there was nothing I could do to add them. I should be now merely an unwelcome intruder. An escort was to be there shortly to convey them northward, and for me to be found in their company by Brennan would only inflame him and add greatly to the embarrassment of his wife's position. Much as I might long for immediate vindication in her sight, the plain duty of true love was to depart at once, and permit time to straighten out the tangle.

"You must pardon me," I hastened to say, standing hat in hand before her, "but it would not be best for me to intrude upon Mrs. Brennan after her late reception. I merely halted here in order to assure myself of your presence and safety. My men are even now waiting for me a few hundred yards away."

"But I wish you to meet Arthur."

"Oh, I think not, Miss Minor. I feel warm friendship for Lieutenant Caton, but we wear different uniforms, serve under different flags, and a meeting here, both with armed forces behind us, would naturally have to be a hostile one. However the Lieutenant and I might consent to a temporary truce, his superior officer, Major Brennan, would not likely prove of the same mind."

"Then you really must go?"

"Unless you specially desire to witness a cavalry skirmish in your front doorway, I certainly consider it best."

"And I held out my hand. 'Surely we part as friends, and I may hope that you will intercede in my behalf with Mrs. Brennan.'"

She rose up impulsively.

"How ridiculous; how supremely ridiculous! Why, of course I will, though I don't suppose Edith really cares very much, but she believed it would be highly proper to be shocked. I don't think she likes you so very well anyway, Captain Wayne, for she never will talk about you."

With these cheering words ringing in my ears, and feeling thoroughly defeated in every cherished hope, I strode savagely down the long hill and mounted my horse. How roughly fortune had sufficed me, to be sure, and how extremely small the inspiration left. Well, perhaps I deserved it for ever permitting myself to love one whom I knew to be the wife of another. Doubtless she had seized upon this slight pretext to be rid of me, and was already rejoicing over its easy accomplishment.

In my agitation I forgot entirely the presence of Maria Bunkay at the house, and ordering my men into saddle prepared for departure without giving a thought to the little fellow and his domestic troubles. I chose the road leading toward the north-west, for although I had not asked the question I conceived it highly probable that Brennan and his party would ride from the Federal cavalry quarters at Colter's Church, and I had no desire to meet them. They were upon an errand of mercy of far greater importance than my revenge.

As we swung along through the heavily timbered land fringing our road, Bunkay pressed his mule into a trot and finally succeeded in ranging up at my side. Even in my disturbed mental condition I was amused at his unique style of riding, although I would not wound him by laughing.

"I say, Cap," he said, jerking the words out to the mule's head trot, and grasping his saddle pommel desperately, "I sorter reckon as how there'll be some fun back there afore long. Toss all signs fall."

"Why?" I stared at him, now thoroughly aroused to the thought that he had important news to communicate.

"Wal," he explained slowly, "whin ye went off, I sorter tuk a notion ter look 'bout a bit. Used ter be an ol' stompin' ground o' mine. So Dutchy an' me clumb that big hill back o' whar we halted, and by gum, down there in that gully on t' other side thar's a durned big camp o' fellers."

I reined up short, and with uplifted hand signalled the men behind to halt.

"Why didn't you tell me this before?" I questioned sternly. "How many were there? and what did they look like?"

He scratched the back of his head thoughtfully, and answered with careful deliberation. "Durn it, I didn't see 'em till after y'd started, an' I reckon as how it took me all o' t'ew mile ter git this yere blame muel up ter whar I cud talk. Thar's quite a smart bunch, but they had some pickets out, an' I cudn't git close nough ter tell zackly. Dutchy thought thar was nigh outer two hundred o' 'em, but I jist don't know. They wasn't dressed like sojers o' either army, an' I reckon they're out o' t'her mile."

I glanced at my little handful of men, scarcely knowing what decision it might be wise to make. Undoubtedly they would fight if occasion arose, but the odds were terribly heavy; besides, if Brennan came, and his party got away that same evening, as was planned for them to do, then it might not be necessary for us to strike a blow. I was certainly in no mood to expose my small command merely to save the empty house from destruction.

"Ehlers," I said, turning toward the Sergeant, who sat his horse with expressionless face, "you were with the guide when he discovered this camp. How many do you think it contained? and who were they?"

"Vel, dere vos more as two companies, Captain, and dere vos some horses, but dey vos dressed—vot ye calls it?—all ober not der same."

"Not in uniform?"

"Dot vos it."

"Have any of the rest of you seen anything that looked suspicious?" I asked, glancing around into the different faces.

"Maybe I did," answered one of the troopers named Earl. "As we rode up the first hill after leaving the house my horse picked up a stone, and I had to stop and get it out. I reckon I fell behind a quarter of a mile or more, and just as I started I looked back, and a party of ten or twelve fellows was just riding in through them big gates onto the front lawn. But them fellows was soldiers for sure; they rode regular like, and all of them wore caps. It was so far off I couldn't tell the color of their clothes, but them caps made me think they was Feds."

I chose my course at once. This undoubtedly must have been Brennan's party.

"Thank you, my man; it would have been better if you had reported that to me at once," I said. "However, I understand the situation much better now. Sergeant, we will go into camp here. Post pickets in both directions, but put your most careful men on that hill yonder. Let them report promptly any signs of fire to the southeast, or any sound of guns."

We completed all our cooking before dark, and when the night finally closed down about us it proved to be an exceedingly black one, although the skies were clear. Sleep was an impossibility for me, as my mind was in constant turmoil.

Ehlers was lying next me upon the grass, solemnly puffing at his huge pipe, and I held my watch to the glow in its bowl in order to see the time. It was nearly midnight.

"Those fellows ought to be at it before this," I said to him, "if they intend to accomplish anything to-night."

"I tink so too," he answered slowly. "I vill see dot der guard is all right, an' den vill get some sleep, for I am pretty much done up already."

He arose ponderously to his feet, and stretched out his short arms in a prodigious yawn. As he stood there, his pudgy figure outlined against the sky, there was borne to our ear the sound of a furious struggle on hilltop to the south—a shout, blows, a volley of cursing, then silence. An instant later we were both running through the darkness toward the scene of trouble.

"What is it, Sam?" I questioned breathlessly, as I came suddenly upon the little group.

"A feller on horseback," was the answer. "He come up on us like a streak out o' t'et black boller, an' he's a sure pot away of Mason hedn't obashed him with his gun. I've got the cuss safe collared now."

"Who are you?" I asked sternly, striving in vain to see something of him through the darkness. "Where were you riding?"

I had scarcely spoken when our prisoner thrust hands roughly aside and took one hasty step toward me.

"My God, Wayne! Is it possible this is you?" he cried excitedly.

"Caton?" I exclaimed, as surprised as himself. "Caton? What is it? What is wrong. Are you from the Minor house? Has it been attacked?"

"Yes," he answered, panting yet from his exertion and excitement. "We were to start North with the ladies at nine o'clock, but the house was surrounded as soon as it became dark. Those devils supposed it to be unguarded, and advanced without precautions. We fired and drove them back. He had repulsed three attacks when I left at eleven, but three of our men were already hit."

"You were after aid?"

"I was striving to reach our advance pickets at McMillan. It seemed the only possible chance, and none of the men would volunteer to make the ride. One was killed trying it before I started. God knows how I hated to leave them, but it had to be done. How many have you?"

"Only twenty; but if we could once get inside along with your fellows, we might hold the house until reinforcements came."

"Thank God! I knew you would!" he cried joyfully, grasping me again fervently by the hand. "You are not one to hesitate over the color of a uniform at such a time as this. Only Wayne," and he hesitated an instant. "It is right I should tell you that Brennan is there, and in command."

"I know it, but those women must be saved nevertheless," I answered firmly, my mind settled. "This is no time for personal quarrelling, and whatever color of cloth we wear those outlaws are our common enemies, to be hunted down like wild beasts. I have seen specimens of their fiendish cruelty that make my blood run cold to remember. The very thought of those who are now exposed falling into such hands is enough to craze one; death would be preferable a thousand times. How many fighting men have you?"

"Seven fit for duty."

"Will you ride forward, or go back with us?"

"We must send word"—and the gallant fellow's voice shook—"but God knows, Wayne, I want to go back. If we both live I am to marry Celia Minor."

"I understand," I said gravely. "Ehlers, who is your best rider?"

"It was dot fuddy little fellow Glen, Captain."

"Glen, come here."

The trooper, a mere boy, with freckled face and great honest gray eyes, but wiry and tough as steel, pushed his way through the group and faced me.

"Glen," I said, "your Sergeant tells me you are the best rider in the troop. I am going to intrust you with the most important duty of all. The lives of every one of us and of four helpless women depend entirely upon your riding. You take two horses, kill both if necessary, but stop for nothing until your duty is done. You are to carry a note from me, and another from this gentleman, who is an officer in the Federal army, and deliver them both to the commandant of the first military post you find. Insist upon reaching him in person. It makes no difference which army the post belongs to, for this is a matter of humanity. The Federal outpost at McMillan is the nearest to us; make for there. You understand?"

The boy saluted gravely, all mischief gone from his face.

"I do, sir," he said. "But I'd a darn sight rather stay here and fight."

"You will be back in plenty of time to take a hand, my lad. Now, men"—and I turned to the dark, expectant ring about me—"this is no ordinary duty of your enlistment, and I wish no one to accompany me tonight who does not volunteer for the service. Seven Federal soldiers and four women, three of them Virgilians, are attacked at the house we have just left by a large party of bushwhacking guerrillas, the offscourings of hell. Every one of you knows what that means. Will you go with me to their rescue?"

No one seemed anxious to be first to speak. I could see them look aside uneasily at one another.

"Bunkay," I said, "I feel sure you will go, for your wife is there."

"Married?"

"Yes; Miss Minor told me this afternoon, but I had forgotten to mention it."

The little man sprang into the air and came down with a whoop.

"The bloody devils!" he cried excitedly. "Ye bet I'll go."

"Come, Sergeant, speak up; what do you men say?"

"I like not to fight mit der Tankees," he admitted candidly, "but der vomens, py Chiminy, dot vos anoder ting. I vill go, Captain; mein Gott, Yaw."

"We're with you, sir," spoke voice after voice gravely around the dark circle, and then Sands added: "We'll show them that Yanks how the feller's Rebs kin fight, sir."

Ten minutes later Glen, bearing the two messages to the Blue and Gray, was speeding recklessly through the black night northward, while my little squad was moving cautiously back over the road we had so lately traversed.

The Kitchen Cabinet

IF YOU have a friend and you love him well, let my advice on your friendship glimpse.

Print all his faults in nonpareil. But publish his virtues in big long primer.

MEMORY JOGS.

Put the best for a small room. A good background for pictures.

Dates stuffed with left-over icing flavored with lemon juice, are a most acceptable sweetmeat. Good for the lunch box.

If faded paper, with no other colors, a coat of calcium chloride will make a fresh wall.

With a little water and a dash of salt, you can wash away the dirt from your windows.

Do not throw away a little left-over boiled frosting, as it can be kept soft if set in hot water. A few nuts and raisins chopped added to it and drop on wafers, bake to a light brown, and you have a nice little cake to serve with a cup of tea.

Did you ever notice that we usually do the things we want very much to do? We are bound to find time for them. Are you house-cleaning and the victrols in bloom? Just keep in mind that dirt we always have with us, but victrols come but once a year.

Keep an eye out for the delicious mushroom, learn a few and have a dainty dish served at least once a week. Early in May the bonny little caps appear with their frills of pink and lavender, and they last until the freezing frosts of the autumn.

Nellie Maxwell.

Their Fate.

"What became of the two clerks you had here named Gunn and Ball?"

"A similar and appropriate fate overtook them both."

"What was it?"

"Gunn was fired and Ball was bounced."

MANY DAINTY DISHES

ALL SORTS OF GOOD THINGS TO SELECT FROM.

Hanoverian Steaks as the Principal Material for Dinner—Nut Brown Bread Almost as Good as Cake—Coffee Parfait.

Hanoverian steaks are little ham-burg steaks, broiled and well seasoned. Over them is poured at serving time the following sauce: Brown in one tablespoon of butter one-half cup of finely chopped onion and cook five minutes. Add four tomatoes, cut in pieces, or one cup of canned tomato. Season with salt and pepper and add one-half teaspoon of sugar. Cook for ten minutes.

Nut brown bread is a delicious adjunct to the five o'clock tea, and is quite rich enough to be used in place of cake. It slices very thin and may be made into sandwiches with cream cheese. To make it, use two cups of sour milk, one-half cup of molasses in which has been dissolved one large teaspoon of soda; one-half cup of sugar, three cups of whole wheat flour, one teaspoon salt. Mix thoroughly and add one cup of walnut meats cut in small pieces, but not chopped, over which has been sprinkled one teaspoon of sifted flour. Pour into a bread pan and bake in a slow oven for one hour.

Sugared strips are made when making the rhubarb pie for dinner. Roll out the left-over paste, cut in two even pieces, spread one with jam, lay the other strip over, sprinkle with granulated sugar, cut in finger lengths and melt in a hot oven. The sugar will melt and caramelize. These are also nice with afternoon tea.

Coffee Parfait—Boil one cup of water with one cup of sugar until it will spin a thread. Pour slowly over the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs, and when cold add one pint of cream, whipped stiff, one-half cup of very strong black coffee and one-half teaspoon of vanilla. Put in a covered mold, pack in ice and salt and let stand for four hours.

White Nut Cake—Cream together one-third cup of butter, one cup of sugar. Add one-half cup of sweet milk, two cups of flour, two teaspoons of baking powder. Beat thoroughly, then add one cup of walnut meats cut in small pieces and dusted with one teaspoon of flour, and at the last fold in the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs. Bake in a square pan in a slow oven for one hour. Cover with boiled icing and decorate with halves of walnut meats.

Risotto—Parboil for ten minutes one cup of rice. Drain, blanch with water and let drain again. Put two tablespoons of butter in a frying pan, trim in the rice, add two tablespoons of chopped onion, one cup of thick tomato, one and one-half teaspoons of salt, a little paprika and two and one-half cups of water. Cover and let cook slowly until the rice is tender and the water absorbed. Take up on a hot serving dish, sprinkle over one-half cup of grated cheese, stir with fork and serve very hot.

Curried Eggs—Hard boil three eggs. Make a white sauce of one tablespoon of butter, one of flour and one cup of milk. Stir till thick and smooth, add one-half teaspoon of salt and one-half teaspoon of curry powder. Cut the eggs in eighths and add to the sauce and pour over slices of toast.

Thought Hubby was Mean. Society Dame—Oh, doctor, I'm so sorely troubled with ennui!

Doctor—H'm! Why don't you interest yourself in finding out how the other half lives?

Society Dame—Gracious! Why, I'm not looking for a divorce.—Jude.

FRUIT DEALERS WON'T PAY MORE

The Interstate Commerce Commission in a finding handed down Thursday refused to permit a proposed advance in rates for the refrigeration of fruits and vegetables shipped from Western Maryland to Washington, New York, and other points in the East. The proposed rates by previous order had been suspended until July 30. Thursday's order permanently bars them.

Shippers located east of Hagerstown, who dispose of their products to commission houses in Washington and New York, were the complainants in the action, the Western Maryland Railway being the defendant. The present rate on a full tank car from Hagerstown to Washington is $30 and an advance of $3 was filed with the commission. The half tank rate is $20 and the proposed advance was $2.

Digging Out Corns Causes Blood Poison

To really make a corn go away, to cure it for all time, there is just one way. Putnam's Painless Corn and Wart Extractor, a soothing, helpful remedy that separates the corn from the good flesh, lifts it out root and branch—does it quickly and without pain. The name tells the story. Putnam's Painless Corn and Wart Extractor, price 25c. Look out for dangerous substitutes. "Putnam's Extractor" is sold by People's Drug Store.

Her Comprehensive Reply.

"I ask only," in well modulated tones said the earnest, fiddle faced young man, "that you give me what you can of your love and that you never strive for my sake to deny any yearning or strange impulse that pants within you. Give me what you can while you can give it without grudging or regretting, but the moment you feel that it is a task to love me renounce me forever, though the verdict pierce me to the very heart."

"How cute!" returned the bluff young thing. "But—ee—he! hee!—yes, Willoughby!"—Puck.
